Former elected official and Biden Admin appointee
Washington, District of Columbia, United States

Summary

"We were taught how to recognize colors and count to ten. Shown how to hold a spoon and tie our laces. Nagged about table manners and doing homework. Trained to recognize threats in our midst and opportunities when they present themselves. But there was very little instruction about how to become wise to ourselves. We were encouraged to find out what we were good at, but not to figure out what we stood for and how we came to stand for it. We learned the value of making good choices, but not to understand why we felt they were the right ones. We became good at telling people what they wanted to hear and stifled what we wanted to say." — Bernadette Jiwa
